GENOVIA — History was made yesterday as Amelia “Mia” Thermopolis was officially crowned the new Queen of Genovia, marking the beginning of a new era for the small but proud European kingdom.

The coronation, held in the Royal Palace, drew dignitaries, nobles, and cheering citizens who filled the streets of Pyrus. Mia, once an ordinary teenager from San Francisco, accepted the crown from her grandmother, Queen Clarisse Renaldi, in a ceremony steeped in tradition.

“Genovia is ready for a bright future, and I am ready to serve with my heart and my courage,”

Queen Mia declared in her first address to the nation. Her words were met with applause from those inside the palace and thousands gathered outside.

The day also marked an emotional farewell for Queen Clarisse, who reigned for decades. “It has been my greatest honor to serve Genovia,” she said, before placing the crown on her granddaughter’s head.

Celebrations filled the capital with music, parades, and fireworks. Citizens waved flags as Mia appeared on the palace balcony, standing alongside Queen Clarisse in a show of unity and renewal.

While questions remain about how the young monarch will balance tradition with modernization, many see her journey from reluctant princess to confident leader as proof that fairy tales can come true.

Evil Lurks in Perron Home: Warrens Called to Investigate

By Maria Beatrice Magat

HARRISVILLE, R.I. — Panic has spread through a quiet Rhode Island town as the Perron family reported terrifying disturbances inside their farmhouse. According to witnesses, furniture moved on its own, doors slammed shut without cause, and family members claimed to see shadowy figures in the night.

Renowned paranormal investigators Ed and Lorraine Warren arrived yesterday to assess the situation, describing the case as “one of the darkest hauntings we’ve ever encountered.”

The couple is known for handling unusual cases across New England, but sources say even they appeared unsettled by the farmhouse’s atmosphere. Local officials have not yet issued a — — formal statement, though neighbors have begun holding nightly vigils outside the Perron property, praying for the family’s safety. Some claim to have heard “blood-curdling screams” echoing from the house, while others swear they saw shadowy figures in the windows long after the Perrons fled.

The town remains divided: many dismiss the reports as hysteria, but others fear something sinister is rooted deep within the farmhouse walls.

“We’ve lived here all our lives and never seen anything like this,” one farmer said. With the Warrens now leading the investigation, speculation grows over whether the case is imagination run wild—or a haunting that could make history.
